Careers Adviser comment

Looking for a course in music (performing or music technology) or creative media, but don't find traditional courses like BTECs or A levels attractive? Think you have talent and potential? This could be your answer. Access to Music courses tend to be more practical, "hands on" and specific. Delivered through local centres in different parts of the country, you can gear your course to your chosen specialism with topics such as vocalist skills, artist development, sound engineering and music performance. You'll even find some courses at degree level. Well worth a look.
